LEGISLATIVE ANALYSIS

Submitted by Suzanne Thompson

Governor Newsom has until September 30 to sign, veto or allow bills to become law without his signature. As of August 15, he had signed 164 bills and vetoed four. Following are bills he signed in August.

- Senate Bill 905, Sen. Wiener (D San Francisco), eliminates the "locked door loophole," which required prosecutors to prove that someone broke into a locked vehicle to convict a suspect of auto burglary.
- Assembly Bill 1779, Assemblymember Irwin (D Thousand Oaks), lets prosecutors collect crimes across multiple counties into one court so they can be charged as a felony (see Assembly Bill 2943 below).
- Senate Bill 1144, Sen. Skinner (D Berkeley), makes it easier to prosecute organized retail theft rings that sell stolen goods on online platforms.
- Assembly Bill 2943, Assemblymember Zbur (D Los Angeles), makes it easier for police to arrest people on suspicion of retail theft when officers do not witness a crime. It allows prosecutors to collect thefts by one suspect to reach the $950 threshold for felony theft charges.
- Assembly Bill 1802, Assemblymember Jones-Sawyer (D Los Angeles), would make permanent the crime of organized retail theft and make permanent regional property crime task forces that were expected to expire (see Senate Bill 982 below)
- Assembly Bill 3209, Assemblymember Berman (D Palo Alto), lets stores obtain restraining orders against people who harass employees, steal from, or vandalize their businesses.
- Assembly Bill 1972, Assemblymember Alanis (R Modesto), directs the California Highway Patrol to work with railroad police and to target cargo theft.
- Senate Bill 1242, Sen. Min (D Irvine), allows higher criminal sentences for people convicted of starting a fire while committing retail theft.
- Senate Bill 1416, Sen. Newman (D Fullerton), creates escalating sentencing enhancements for selling or attempting to exchange stolen goods.
- Senate Bill 982, Sen. Wahab (D Fremont), repeals the sunset on the crime of organized retail theft.

Legislature approves bill to convert unused property at Norwalk's Metropolitan State Hospital for mental health treatment, housing

SB 1336, Sen. Archuleta (D – Pico Rivera), which passed in the California Legislature on August 28 by a vote of 39-0, authorizes that seven unused buildings at Metropolitan State Hospital in Norwalk be renovated to provide housing and treatment for people with mental illness, a major contributing factor to homelessness. Renovating part of these facilities would be one step toward addressing the critical issues of both homelessness and mental health in our own backyard, while also making effective use of property that is just sitting idle.

Status: Sent to governor's desk; he must sign or veto it by the end of this month.

UNDERSTANDING THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE

Submitted by Sylvia Southerland, Vice President of Membership

The Electoral College is a unique feature of the United States' presidential election system. Established by the Constitution, it serves as an indirect method for selecting the president and vice president. Instead of a direct popular vote, voters in each state cast their ballots for a group of electors who then formally elect the president.

Each state is allocated several electors equal to its total representation in Congress, which includes both senators and representatives. This means larger states like California have more electors than smaller states like Wyoming. However, every state has at least three electors, ensuring a minimum level of influence in the election process.

In most states, the candidate who wins the popular vote takes all the state's electoral votes, a system known as "winner-takes-all." The only exceptions are Maine and Nebraska, which divide their electors based on congressional district outcomes.

The Electoral College is often a topic of debate. Supporters argue it protects the interests of smaller states and prevents urban areas from dominating elections. Critics believe it can lead to situations where a candidate wins the presidency without winning the popular vote, as happened in the 2000 and 2016 elections.

In essence, the Electoral College reflects the founding fathers' desire to balance the power between populous and less-populous states, ensuring that all regions of the country have a voice in selecting the nation's leader.

For many Republican voters, the Electoral College remains a vital part of preserving the federal structure and ensuring a fair representation of diverse states across the country.

Understanding how it works helps us appreciate the careful balance that our founders sought to create in our election process.

AMERICANISM 2024 isn't the only noteworthy presidential election

Submitted by Suzanne Thompson

While the circumstances surrounding this year's presidential election definitely make it one for the history books, here are a few of the many examples of noteworthy elections throughout our nation's past:

1788-1789: George Washington vs. no one

As organized political parties had not yet been formed, George Washington ran unopposed, and was the only person in our nation's history to receive 100 percent of the Electoral College vote. The real contest was for vice president, which at that time was awarded to the electoral vote runner-up (each elector cast two votes to ensure there would be a runner-up). John Adams beat 10 other candidates for the win.

1800: Thomas Jefferson vs. John Adams

With the "pick two" Electoral College system, Jefferson tied with Aaron Burr, his VP running mate. The tie-breaking vote went to the House of Representatives, which took seven days to make Jefferson the victor. The passage of the 12th amendment to the US Constitution later required the Electoral College to pick the president and vice-president separately.

1872: Ulysses S. Grant vs. Horace Greeley

Grant easily glided to the presidency because his opponent Horace Greely died before the election was finalized. Grant captured 286 electoral votes versus Greeley's 66, which were split among other candidates. Greeley remains the only presidential candidate to die before the final votes were tallied.

1912: Theodore Roosevelt vs. Willian Howard Taft vs. Woodrow Wilson

Disillusioned by his party, former Republican president Theodore Roosevelt formed the Progressive Party. During an event in Wisconsin, he was shot in the chest, yet finished delivering his speech. In the end, Roosevelt and Taft split the Republican vote (capturing second and third place, the last time in history that a major party presidential candidate would fail to finish either first or second), giving Wilson the win. Fourth place winner Eugene Debbs won six percent of the popular vote, the largest for a Socialist candidate in a US general election.

1948: Harry S. Truman vs. Thomas Dewey

It wasn't looking good for Democratic presidential incumbent Truman. His leadership was approved by only one in three Americans, Republicans controlled both houses of Congress, he lost the support of southern states with his support of civil rights for African Americans, and his commerce secretary quit to run against him on the Progressive ticket. Although he campaigned hard, making several train "whistle stops" across the country, no one, even Truman, expected him to win. In a famous photo, a grinning Truman held up a copy of the Chicago Tribune's morning edition, which went to press earlier than usual on the day after the election due to a printers' strike, with the headline, "Dewey Defeats Truman."

1960: John F. Kennedy vs. Richard Nixon

This race featured the first televised debate, which allowed the candidates to be seen from America's living rooms. TV viewers overwhelmingly favored Democratic Senator Kennedy, who wore a dark suit, was tan, and radiated health. Republican Vice President Nixon, on the other hand, had just gotten out of the hospital for knee surgery and had lost weight, and appeared pale and listless in a grey, ill-fitting suit and unshaven. It was a draw for those who tuned in via radio, however, with some giving Nixon the edge. The outcome was close, with Kennedy winning the election by only 118,000 votes.

1984: Ronald Reagan vs. Walter Mondale

Republican incumbent Reagan won every single state except Democrat Mondale's home state of Minnesota, winning in a "landslide" of 525 electoral votes to 13. The election also made history with Mondale's VP choice of Congresswoman Geraldine Ferraro, the first time a woman was named to a presidential ticket.

2000: George W. Bush vs. Al Gore

Democrat Gore beat Republican Bush in the popular vote, but the electoral vote was close. On election night, three states were too close to call, and it ultimately came down to Florida. Gore contested the count in several close counties and demanded a recount. One of the challenges of the hand count was determining whether semi-attached scraps of paper, or "hanging chads" on punch card ballots should count as votes. Five weeks later, the Supreme Court determined that a state recount was unconstitutional, and halted smaller recounts. The original vote counts stood, making Bush the winner. Bush was the first candidate in 112 years to win the presidency without capturing the popular vote.

2008: Barack Obama vs. John McCain

First-time Senator Obama bested seasoned Senator McCain to become the nation's first Black president. The election drew unparallel public interest, with one of the most memorable players in the race being Alaska Governor Sarah Palin, McCain's VP pick. The vice-presidential debate broke records with 70 million viewers.

2016: Donald Trump vs. Hillary Clinton

In the largest presidential primary in history, 17 Republican candidates campaigned for the nomination. Real estate businessman and former reality TV celebrity Trump became the first nominee in decades to earn the nomination without any political experience. Democrat nominee Clinton was the first woman in American history to win a major political party's nomination. Both candidates faced controversy during the election. Clinton was scrutinized over her use of a private email server while serving as Secretary of State. Trump refused to release his tax returns, something that every candidate since Gerald Ford had done as a matter of course. He was criticized for bizarre tweets and statements and derogatory remarks toward women, and was accused of sexual harassment. Most pundits predicted a landslide for Clinton, and while she won the popular vote, Trump racked up 290 electoral votes to Clinton's 232 to win, making it only the fifth time in US history that the electoral and popular votes didn't match.
